

Who's afraid of foreigners?

Intensive Course taught Online (Credit in Tel Aviv University: 2 points)

University of Cologne and Tel Aviv University Collaboration

Global migration and the presence of immigrants in a country have been topics of most heated public and political debates within an ever-growing number of sovereign states. Migrant and refugee inflows have been influenced by relationships between countries, on the one hand, and have had a marked effect on these relationships, on the other hand. This course offers an opportunity to engage with the knowledge on public attitudes toward migrant and refugee populations, to understand social, contextual, and individual sources and processes that shape these attitudes; and to do so in an international environment. The course is a collaborative project between the University of Cologne and Tel Aviv University, led by two research experts in the field of public opinion and migration: Prof. Eldad Davidov (University of Cologne) and Prof. Anastasia Gorodzeisky (Tel Aviv University). During the course, M.A. students from both universities will study together and work on assignments in small groups which will include Israeli and German students to enhance cross-country cooperation.

The course consists of four weekly zoom meetings: An introduction and three one-day blocks.

7.2.24: Introduction (2 academic hours), starts at 17.00 (Israeli time)/16.00 (German time)

15.2.24: Block 1 (8 academic hours) starts at 13.00 (Israeli time)/12.00 (German time)

22.2.24: Block 2 (8 academic hours) starts at 13.00 (Israeli time)/12.00 (German time)

29.2.24: Block 3 (8 academic hours) starts at 13.00 (Israeli time)/12.00 (German time)